MARKET COMMENTARY

Market conditions became more volatile during August as rising government bond yields and renewed Middle East tensions offset comparatively resilient economic data. UK CPI increased from 2.6% to 2.9% in July, largely reflecting the increase in household gas and electricity prices following the July adjustment to Ofgem's energy price cap, while core inflation remained unchanged at 2.6%. Economic activity remained comparatively resilient. The UK composite PMI strengthened in August and consumer confidence reached a two-year high, although labour-market conditions continued to moderate. At its late-July meeting, the Bank of England held Bank Rate at 3.75%, with three Monetary Policy Committee members voting for an increase to 4.0%. The Bank expects inflation to rise to approximately 3.2% in the fourth quarter, with future policy decisions remaining sensitive to energy prices and evidence of broader inflationary pressures. Sovereign bond markets remained influential. The 10-year gilt yield traded around 5%, while the 30-year yield rose above 5.8% during the month amid concerns over inflation, energy prices and government borrowing. The US 10-year Treasury yield approached 4.75%, while Japan's 10-year government bond yield reached its highest level in approximately three decades. Credit markets were comparatively resilient. Equity markets became more volatile later in August, with higher yields placing pressure on technology and semiconductor shares. UK equities were supported by their energy exposure and defensive composition. Japanese equities retreated sharply from mid-month highs as domestic bond yields rose. Smaller companies also continued to deliver strong year-to-date performance in several markets, including the US. Looking ahead, energy markets remain central to the inflation outlook. A sustained reopening of the Strait of Hormuz would alleviate some pressure on energy prices, while continued disruption could keep inflation risks elevated. With the September policy meetings and the UK's autumn fiscal announcements approaching, and valuations elevated in parts of developed equity markets, diversification, resilient businesses and selective duration exposure remain important.
